

The Voluntary Prekindergarten (VPK) legislation was signed into law by Governor Jeb Bush on January 2, 2005. This law created a program to prepare every Florida four-year-old for kindergarten and build a strong foundation for their continued educational success. The VPK program will provide each child the opportunity to perform better in school and throughout life with quality programs that include high literacy standards, accountability, appropriate curricula, substantial instruction periods, manageable class sizes and qualified instructors.

Florida recognizes that parents are children's first teachers and build their language and literacy skills by reading with them regularly, giving them a love for reading and books. So don't overlook the wonder and achievements your child will experience in the Voluntary Prekindergarten program – share and support his or her learning experience.
